

Write Like It Matters—Because It Does

10 Prompts to Help You Find Your Voice in a Noisy World

“A word spoken at the right time is like gold apples in silver settings.”

Proverbs 25:11

Your words—whether scribbled in a journal, spoken over coffee, or shared with the world—can bring life, healing, and hope.

These faith-fueled prompts were created to remind you of that very thing: your voice matters. Your words matter. And the simple act of writing in obedience might be the answer to someone else’s silent prayer.

So grab a pen, brew something warm, and get cozy: let’s start right here . . .

Coffee Shop Noise

You’re sitting in your favorite coffee shop when someone voices doubt, fear, or deep discouragement. What loving words would you offer if you could? Write with kindness and compassion, as if your words could become a turning point or someone who needs truth.

For the One Who’s About to Give Up

Think of a person who feels worn down, unseen, or ready to quit. Write them a letter or short note of encouragement. Speak right to their heart. Remind them of what God says about their story and why it’s worth continuing.

A Bold Cup of Coffee

Have you ever chosen courage over comfort? Tell us what you learned. Now encourage your reader to take their own step of bravery—with a cup of strong courage on the side. Let this be your gentle push toward risk, faith, and holy boldness.

Pull Up a Chair

We've all felt like we don't belong—overlooked, misunderstood, or spiritually on the edge. Is there someone in your circles that might be feeling the same type of way? Write something that pulls up a chair for them. Use your words to extend a genuine welcome, to say, "You matter. You have a place here."

When Church Hurts

Church shouldn't wound—but sometimes it does. If you (or someone you know) has walked through hurt in the Church, write about it with honesty and a redemptive lens. Acknowledge the pain, but also point the way toward hope and healing.

Your Voice Matters Because . . .

List five reasons why your voice matters—and why the person reading this should believe theirs does too. Then each week, choose one reason to expand into a reflection, journal entry, or devotional thought. Remember: purpose has nothing to do with likes or shares.

The World Is Heavy. The Word Is Hope.

The world feels weighed-down and overshadowed by fear, division, or crisis, and it's easy to get lost in discouragement. As Kingdom-focused believers, we know the only through is to cling to hope and to shine that light of hope with those around us. Write a piece that shifts the focus back to God's promises and offers assurance instead of anxiety. Point to Scripture as the steady voice and shine a light of hope on a weary world.

Write the Psalm You Needed

This prompt gets us feeling joyful and comforted. Let your words become a prayer right where you are—whether it's joy, sorrow, longing, or worship. Don't worry about style or formality. Let the poem flow from within you and just write like David did: real, unfiltered, and full of faith.

Coffee Shop Confessions

Sometimes in my prayers, I imagine I'm sitting across from Jesus with a cup of coffee in hand. I'm giving him my prayers, my frustrations, and my praises, and he's giving me his undivided attention, hanging on every word. What would you tell Jesus if you could chat with him over coffee? What do you think He might say back to you? Write that conversation with honesty and tenderness.

Lunch Notes

Do you ever scratch a note on a paper towel and tuck it in your child's lunchbox? It doesn't matter that the pen was almost out of ink or all that you could find was a broken piece of a crayon—it's simply the thought that counts. If you could leave one short message for a stranger who sits at your table after you, what would it be? Keep it simple and heartfelt—something someone could hold onto for the rest of the day.

As you put pen to paper, may you remember this simple truth:

Your words matter. Your voice matters.

And God will use them—far beyond what you can see.

Go write like it matters. Because it does.
